User logs in here, instead of extra step

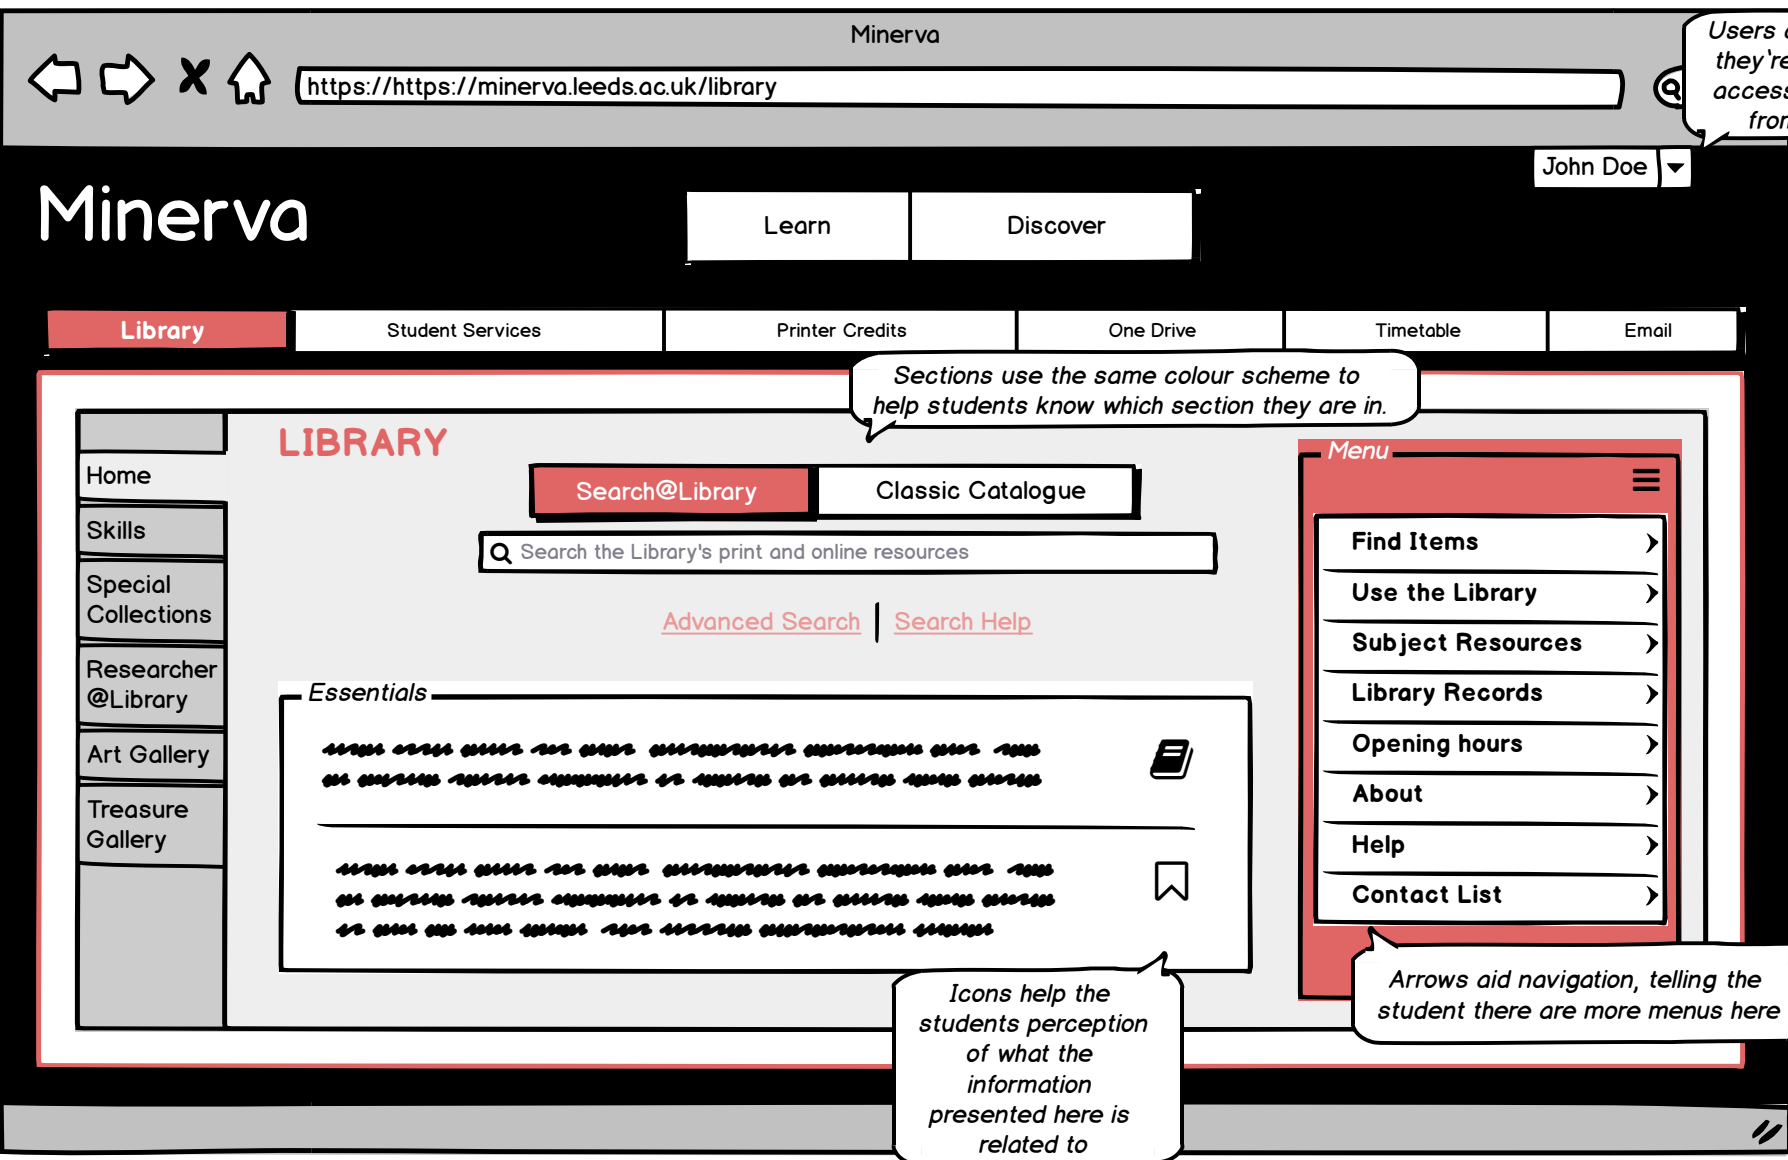

Minerva homepage has a link to sign in page rather than signing in directly. The new login page does away with this extra step, saving the user the extra time.

This also helps with autocomplete feature in a web browser. The user doesn't have to do anything extra to get to the home page.

System has the same colour scheme throughout

Users can always see they're logged in can access their account from this button

Arrows aid navigation, telling the student there are more menus here

The current library icon takes you to another login page and then directly to your library records page. We have changed it so that clicking the library link from the navigation bar takes the student to the library home page where they can then choose what task they want to perform. The student also doesn't have to sign in again to access their records. The current library site also has many duplicate links to the same page (opening hours for example)
